Once on the brink of extinction, The Aleutian Canada goose population, now numbering over 40,000, is considered "fully recovered" by the U. Fish and Wildlife Service.

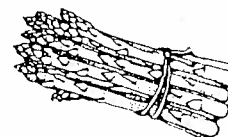

As goose numbers have recovered, this has created a burden for local family farmers and ranchers. It is an unusual aspect of this story that for a brief but intense time every spring and fall, a group of small family farmers has ended up feeding, and subsidizing, virtually the entire world population of a recovering species.
