...About the authors

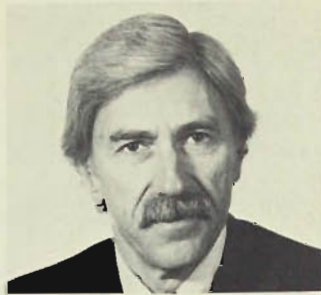

John R. Block

John R. Block is President of the National American Wholesale Grocers Association. As Secretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture from 1981 to 1986, he had key responsibilities for farm programs, and opening of world markets for U.S. agricultural products. He participated in the highest level of councils and committees of the U.S. Government dealing with farm program, tax, economic, and trade issues. As Secretary, he visited over 30 foreign countries—more than any predecessor. He was raised in Illinois, attended West Point, and farmed in Illinois previous to being appointed Secretary.

Thomas Grennes

Thomas Grennes is Professor of Economics and Business at North Carolina State University. His present work concentrates on international trade. He has written extensively on agricultural trade as well as general economics—including exchange rates and energy trade. Grennes is co-author of Economics of World Grain Trade, published by Praeger Press; and author of International Economics, published by Prentice Hall. His research has focused on trade in differentiated agricultural commodities, and on the structures of domestic and international markets and barriers—all of which amply qualifies him to write about decoupling farm programs on an international scale.

J. Dawson Ahalt

J. Dawson Ahalt is the U.S. Agricultural Counselor in Buenos Aires, Argentina. From 1981 to 1984 he was USDA's Deputy Assistant Secretary for Economics. Ahalt has also held other senior positions at USDA with WAOB and the Office of the Director of Agricultural Economics. Earlier he worked with the Cost of Living Council and USDA's Economic Research Service. These experiences give him a unique background for observing policy and economic developments in Argentina and assessing their effects.

Steven Taff

Steven Taff, an Assistant Professor and Extension Economist, and Carlisle Ford Runge, an Associate Professor at the University of Minnesota, have specialized in agricultural and resource problems. Taff holds advanced degrees in urban and regional planning, as well as agricultural economics from the University of Wisconsin. At Minnesota he has given particular attention to the economic and environmental effects of land retirement programs. Runge also has a Ph. D. from the University of Wisconsin. In 1976-77 he worked on the House Agriculture Committee Staff. This year he is in Geneva as a Special Assistant to the U.S. Ambassador to the GATT.

Carlisle Ford Runge

Vernon R. McMinimy

Vernon R. McMinimy is presently Director of Commodity Research for A.E. Staley Manufacturing Company. His understanding of important interrelationships among government, private industry, international markets, domestic policies, and trade negotiations, stem from a career that has combined government and private industry experiences. After graduate work in Kansas and California, he joined USDA in 1962. Through 1969, he was a USDA staff economist concentrating primarily on government grain and wheat programs. Since then he has worked both in Europe and in the United States with international trading companies.

Lowell D. Hill

Lowell D. Hill is L.J. Norton Professor of Agricultural Marketing at the University of Illinois, where his research, teaching, and extension activities concentrate on grain marketing. These interests have earned him a national and international reputation and a number of awards. Recognitions include the Paul A. Funk Award for Contributions to Agriculture and awards of the Illinois Corn Growers Association and the American Agricultural Economics Association. Hill has traveled extensively and is a frequent advisor to farmers, producer organizations, and the grain industry.
