LODGING INDUSTRY DATA FOR MINNESOTA COUNTIES

by Uel Blank
Susan Wagenhals

Reported here are detailed 1970 lodging industry data for each Minnesota county. These data resulted from a study conducted by the University of Minnesota in cooperation with the Minnesota Department of Economic Development, which was financially supported by the Minnesota Resources Commission. The figures given are estimates of the total lodging industry in each county. They are based upon contacts with 83 percent of all lodging businesses operating in Minnesota in 1970.

Every Minnesota county has a travel-tourism industry, hence every county has lodging operations. Lodging businesses, along with food service operations and travel services, make up the readily identifiable part of each county's travel-tourism industry. Other research has shown that these business types are not the only part--in some cases not the most important part--of a community's travel-tourist industry.^{1/} However the above hospitality^{2/} businesses are essential for travel-tourism even though they alone are not fully sufficient to it.

Citizens and agencies having an interest in the community's or county's economic well-being, as well as the living quality available to its citizens, will consider the lodging industry as one of the contributing ingredients. Those with possible interests include chambers of commerce; county and city governing bodies--especially their developmental agencies and park and recreation boards; prospective investors and business developers; and natural resource managers.

^{1/} See for example: Uel Blank, "Tourism in the Lake of the Woods - Rainy Lake Area", Minnesota Agricultural Economist, Number 543, Nov. 1, 1971; and Uel Blank, "The Duluth Tourism Economy", Minnesota Tourist Travel Notes, Volume 13, No. 1, Spring 1975.

^{2/} "Hospitality businesses" are those providing food, lodging, travel and life experiences (recreation; entertainment) to people away from home.

Travel is essential to each community's productive capacity as well as to the operation of its public services. This is in addition to travel's role in vacations, recreation and family visiting. Examples of the current requirement for travel and lodging firms include:

- Sales and supply people service the local retail stores.
- All industry requires both personal services (such as technical and management consultation) and supplies. This is true whether it be agriculture, manufacturing, mining, or forestry.
- Education, health and other personal services require travel both by individuals using the service and by professionals.
- Operation of the community often requires travel in the development and management of facilities such as waste disposal and water systems.
- Public meetings frequently depend upon the facilities and services of hospitality operations.
- Increasingly family gatherings and other social events rely upon hospitality operations for space and services.
- Community celebrations, fairs and festivities generate travel, some by persons performing an essential role in the event, others by visitors.
- Many communities have features such as lakes and winter sports that attract visitors for recreation and vacation purposes.

In examples, such as those listed above, lodging firms perform two roles:

1. They make possible the full range of the modern community's functioning.

2. They contribute jobs, profits and tax base just as do other producing parts of the community's economy.

Those using this information are urged to also obtain Extension Bulletin 386, Minnesota's Lodging Industry: Statistics and Characteristics. Bulletin 386 interprets the data in depth and gives more detailed definitions. It also displays and interprets data by Minnesota regions (Economic Development Regions and Tourism Regions). Basic definitions are given here.

In this report, "lodging" refers to commercial operations primarily serving those travelers temporarily away from home. Health care facilities, college dormitories, and other institutional lodging are not included. Because data were for public directory purposes, private clubs with lodging are also not included. Likewise, facilities having only camping available are not included. Camping facilities that are associated with other commercial lodging operations are reported, but camping capacities are not included in estimates of overnight capacities.

In addition to an "other" class, which encompasses tourist (guest) homes, vacation farms, hunting and canoe outfitter's cabins, houseboat rentals, and other miscellaneous facilities, this report employs three lodging classes.

These are:

Hotels

- Located within population centers and most commonly oriented to the central business district
- Usually an integral building unit two or more stories high
- Usually offering food and other personal services

- Featuring a street-level central lobby with internal access to rooms

Motels

- Oriented to automobile traffic routes and usually near, but not necessarily in, population centers
- Usually limited to one or two stories
- Often an integral building, but may include individual cabin units
- May or may not offer food, beverage, and recreational services

Resorts

- Oriented to a recreational feature, such as water
- Emphasize recreational and leisure pursuits
- Primarily individual cabin units, but may be an integral building or a combination of central facility plus cabins
- Offer weekly rates or rates for a period of days, but may also rent on a per-day basis
- May offer food and/or housekeeping facilities and often price these services as an integral lodging package.

Several operations have characteristics of more than one class, or they lie outside the general features of any of the classes. "Motor Lodges" and "Motor Hotels" are examples. These are large complexes of lodging, food, and related services in areas with high populations and concentrated traffic. They also feature parking and easy traffic access. These have been classified as motels.

Resort-motels are another hybrid group; they have characteristics of both resorts and motels. Like motels, they are usually near population centers. They feature easy automobile access and serve the general traveling public. Like resorts, they may have recreational resources such as water. They offer special recreational services and operate as a recreational destination facility. These operations have also been grouped with motels.

Detailed Information Available

Following this brief discussion are tables of the lodging industry for each Minnesota county. The first table is for the entire state. Regional tables are given in Bulletin 386.

Five aspects of the lodging industry are given in the tables:

- numbers and size
- seasonality of operation
- ownership patterns
- age and modernization
- relationship to natural resources (land and water) and camping facilities.

These aspects are treated under 15 table headings which are briefly defined as follows (See Appendix A of Bulletin 386 for detailed definition):

- I. Estimated Number of Lodges - the number of separate operations for each county or other indicated geographic region.
- II. Distribution of Rental Units - shows the proportion of lodging firms offering cabin units, bedroom units, both cabin and bedroom units.
- III. Estimated Capacity - the overnight capacity available, broken down between bedroom and cabin units.
- IV. Average Number of Rental Units per Establishment - obtained by summing bedroom and cabin units and dividing by the number of operations.
- V. Distribution of Operation Size - a breakdown by number of rental units. Note that cabins and bedroom units are added together in the case of motels and resorts. Because of the small average number of units in resorts a different size distribution is used for this lodging class.

- VI. Seasonal Operation - the proportion that do not operate year-round.
- VII. Distribution of Ownership - the percentage of all operations by ownership types: Individual proprietorships, partnerships and corporations.
- VIII. Distribution of Owner Turnover - The changes in ownership taking place within the 10-year 1960-1970 period.
- IX. Distribution of Establishment Age - the proportion of existing operations that were originally built within the four specified periods.
- X. Modernization - the proportion reporting major expansion or upgrading within the three years prior to 1970.
- XI. Distribution of Water Orientation - the proportion of operations reporting frontage on lakes, on rivers, or not having water frontage.
- XII. Estimated Water Frontage - an estimate of the total water frontage controlled by each lodging type.
- XIII. Distribution of Land Controlled - data not displayed.
- XIV. Estimated Land Controlled - total acres of land controlled by each lodging type. This figure is available for the state only; it is also estimated by regions in Bulletin 386.
- XV. Camping Facilities - the number of lodging operations having camping facilities available by type and number of sites; and average number of hookups are for those reporting hookups available.

Trends in Lodging Firm Numbers

Because of dynamic interrelationships between the lodging industry and the rest of the economy, numbers and types of the lodging operations are in a continuous state of change. The licenses issued for these firms by the Minnesota Health Department provide one measure of some of this change.

Numbers of licensed lodging operations by type are shown in the table immediately following, for the years 1967 and 1975 for each Minnesota county.

These numbers may also be compared with the 1970 counts which are given in the detailed county tables.

The 1975 licensing procedure did not permit a distinction between hotels and motels. Because of this change the numbers comparison between 1967 and 1975 is less useful than it might otherwise be. In general, numbers of hotels have been declining. Seventy-two percent of the hotels in operation in 1970 were 40 or more years old. Most were constructed to serve railroad transportation. Because of location, design and age many cannot be readily readapted to the current lodging markets. While the trend is less distinct in motels, their overall number in Minnesota has probably been stable or also declining over the past eight years; in the United States motel numbers reached a peak in 1963 and have since declined.

It is not possible to make judgements about trends in overnight hotel-motel capacities from these 1967, 1970 and 1975 data. In general hotels have more capacity than motels; recently-constructed motels are usually larger than those built earlier. In any given county these and other factors interact to produce a unique effect upon the hotel-motel capacity.

Overall, the number of resort operations declined sharply from 1967 to 1975. This decline occurred despite the continuation of new construction in some areas of Minnesota. It reflects a change in internal economics as well as changing market demand. As one example: The demand for second homes on water frontage has caused many resorts to be converted to this use; it has also caused land costs to rise sharply for on-going operations (Resorts averaged 880 feet of water frontage in 1970). Studies have shown little change in average resort capacity over the 1960-1970 period. Thus, it can be assumed that changes in resort capacities are proportional to their numbers, as a first approximation. There are notable exceptions, where large new facilities have recently been constructed.

In Table 1, lodging numbers for each county are compared for 1967 and 1975.

Relative Importance of Each County's Lodging Industry

One measure of the lodging industry's importance in each Minnesota county is given in Table 2. Here total overnight capacity of all lodging is expressed as a percentage of the 1970 county population.^{1/} Unfortunately direct economic measures are not available. However preliminary county economic estimates have been made by the Minnesota Department of Economic Development. These latter can serve as a useful supplement to data in this publication; see The Economic Distribution of Tourist-Travel Expenditures in Minnesota by Regions and Counties, Minnesota Department Economic Development, October 1975.

The information in Table 2 does measure the relative role played by the lodging industry when comparing counties. Note that there is overnight capacity for 4.6 percent of Minnesota's population in all lodging facilities. This percentage reaches a low of .1 percent in Red Lake county, .4 percent in Anoka and Scott, .7 percent in Carver and .8 percent in Dodge, Marshall and ^{1/} Small differences between percentages shown in table 2 and the limited county data noted in Bulletin 386 will be observed. This discrepancy arises because of the use of preliminary population data for county calculations made in Bulletin 386.

Waseca counties. In contrast the percentage is 110 for Cook, 84 percent for Lake and 81 percent for Cass County. These differences are produced by a combination of factors:

- Red Lake County lacks distinctive natural features or large cities to generate travel.
- Anoka, Carver and Scott counties are peripheral to the twin cities; travelers would rather be nearer the center of activity.
- Dodge and Waseca counties are both near larger, more attractive communities in which to stay overnight; Rochester and Mankato respectively. They also lack natural features to attract travelers.
- Marshall county has, since 1970, developed substantial added lodging capacity.
- Cook and Lake Counties both have relatively small populations and natural resources having high appeal for vacation/recreation travelers.
- Cass County, with 514 lakes and 20 percent of its surface area as water, also has tremendous relative appeal as a travel destination.
