Contributors

DORIS DETRE RAFLER, of the Agricultural Economics Division, Agricultural Marketing Service, is responsible for the analysis of factors affecting the foreign demand for agricultural commodities. She has written extensively on international trade and financial developments and their influence on United States farm exports.

KENNETH E. OGREN is the Head of the Marketing Information and Statistics Section, Marketing Research Division, AMS.

WALTER A. HENDRICKS, who reported some results from studies on estimating corn yields in our July issue, here collaborates with H. F. Huddleston of his staff on preliminary findings from work on forecasting yields of cotton.

HAROLD F. HUDDLESTON, concerned with research studies on crop-yield forecasting in the Agricultural Estimates Division, joins with Mr. Hendricks in reporting on some of the 1954 cotton work.

DON PAARLBERG is Assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture. He entered the Department in 1953 from the Department of Agricultural Economics at Purdue University. He is secretary to the National Agricultural Advisory Commission.

B. RALPH STAUBER, Chief of the Agricultural Price Statistics Branch, AMS, is chairman of the Departmental Committee for Mathematics and Statistics and of the Committee on Internships in Sampling in the Graduate School of the United States Department of Agriculture. He has taught the course in Principles of Statistical Analysis in the Graduate School since 1931.

KENNETH W. MEINKEN, formerly with AMS, is Assistant Professor of Agricultural Economics at Rutgers University. He is the author of a technical bulletin, now in press, on the demand and price structure for wheat that includes a system of six equations fitted by the relatively new simultaneous equations technique.

HARRY C. TRELOGAN is Director of the Marketing Research Division, AMS.

JOHN O. GERALD, in the Marketing Research Division of AMS, is currently engaged in study of the establishment of egg prices in central markets, including the role of commodity exchanges and the futures market in the establishment of spot prices.

CHARLES E. ROGERS, one of the editors of this journal, was formerly Educational Relations Officer of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO).
