Contributors

FREDERICK D. STOCKER, now a member of the Farm Income Branch, AMS, was formerly engaged in research on problems of farm taxation, public finance, and local government in the Farm Economics Research Division, ARS.

CLIVE R. HARSTON, Associate Professor of Agricultural Economics, Montana State College, is engaged in research aimed at determining the degree to which hedging and futures trading can be used advantageously in the marketing of high protein wheat.

CALVIN L. BEALE is a demographic statistician in the Farm Population and Rural Life Branch, Agricultural Economics Division, AMS.

GEORGE E. FRICK is a member of the Farm Economics Research Division, ARS. Working at the University of New Hampshire, he is engaged in cooperative studies of mechanization and other farm management problems in the Northeast.

MARGUERITE C. BURK, Head of the Consumption Section of Statistical and Historical Research Branch, AMS, has a lively interest in persuading agricultural economists to apply the findings of consumption economics to agricultural problems.

WILLIAM W. ADDISON is with the Price and Trade Research Section of the Statistical and Historical Research Branch, AMS. At the present time, he is working on analyses of the supply response of farmers to changes in prices and other economic variables. He was formerly with the State Statistician's Office at Des Moines, Iowa.

RONALD L. MIGHELL is an Agricultural Economist in the Farm Economics Research Division, ARS.

He has done research in production economics and the competitive position of major farm products.

HYMAN WEINGARTEN, an Analytical Statistician in the Agricultural Economics Division, AMS, is academically trained as a statistician and has had practical experience in methodology. Currently, he is working in the area of demand and price analysis.

DORIS DETRE RAFLER is in the Farm Income Branch of the Agricultural Economics Division, AMS.
