Settling potato contracts with cash instead of spuds on the commodity futures market can sidestep delivery and contract settlement problems. Such cash settlements in lieu of physical delivery are being considered on New York Mercantile Exchange futures market for potatoes. Other commodities could follow the potato lead.

This Economic Research Service report, recommending the optional cash scheme, is reviewed as "one of the best organised and well argued case studies of a futures market" by the British Journal of Agricultural Economics. The focus of this comprehensive study ordered by Congress is on the potato economy, but the issues and problems are common to other commodity stutures markets.
