Prices and Price Spreads for EGGS, FRYING CHICKENS, AND TURKEYS IN 12 MAJOR CITIES, 1966-71

ABSTRACT

During 1966-71, producers of Grade A Large eggs received the highest average share of the retail price--61 percent--up from 58 percent for the period 1961-66. Turkey producers were second with 57 percent, unchanged from the 1961-66 period. Broiler producers received an average of 47 percent--down 3 percentage points from the share they received in 1961-66. Price spreads for eggs and poultry remained fairly stable during 1966-71. However, spreads for various categories of eggs, frying chickens, and turkeys differed considerably among 12 selected cities, depending on such factors as retail store pricing policies, directness of marketing channels, and sources of supply.

PREFACE

Since 1956, Congress has authorized funds to the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) for a number of special studies on price spreads between farmers and consumers. This report, which includes data on the farmer's share of the retail price paid for eggs, frying chickens, and turkeys, is the third compilation of monthly prices and price spreads on poultry products. The first report, Price and Price Spread Statistics for Eggs, Frying Chickens, and Turkeys in Ten Cities, Monthly 1956-61, Economic Research Service (ERS), was published in October 1962. The second study, issued in June 1967, was Prices and Price Spreads for Eggs, Frying Chickens, and Turkeys in 12 Major Cities, 1961-66, ERS Stat. Bull. No. 405.

The authors wish to acknowledge the contribution of Ruth J. Irvin, Economic Assistant, ERS, in helping to collect and organize the data. John R. Pedersen, Agricultural Economist, and Vesta E. Kiley, Statistical Assistant, former members of ERS, analyzed the data for the earlier years shown in the tables. The Market News Branch, Poultry Division, Agricultural Marketing Service, USDA; the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor; and State agencies and private firms cooperated in supplying price data.

HIGHLIGHTS

Among poultry producers during 1966-71, producers of Grade A Large eggs received the highest average share of the retail price--61 percent--up from 58 percent for the period 1961-66. Turkey producers ranked second with 57 percent of the retail price, unchanged from the earlier reporting period. Broiler producers received an average of 47 percent in 1966-71--down from the 50-percent share they received in 1961-66. As with the farm-to-retail price spreads, the share of the retail price received by the farmer varied from year to year.

Price spreads for eggs and poultry were relatively stable during 1966-71. However, margins widened a little during 1970 and 1971, reflecting some of the increased costs of marketing. At the same time, spreads for various categories of eggs, frying chickens, and turkeys differed considerably among 12 selected cities. Variations depended on such factors as retail store pricing policies, directness of marketing channels, and sources of supply.

Farm-to-retail price spreads in the 12 cities averaged 22 cents a dozen for Grade A Large eggs, down 1 cent from 1961-66. Farm-to-retail margins for ready-to-cook frying chickens averaged 22 cents a pound, up 2 cents. The farm-to-retail spread for ready-to-cook medium turkeys (8 to 16 pounds) averaged 22 cents a pound, up 1 cent.

Spreads varied from 15 cents a dozen for Grade A Large eggs in San Francisco to 26 cents a dozen in New York and Boston, 16 cents a pound for frying chickens in Denver to 27 cents a pound in Seattle, and 20 cents a pound for medium turkeys in Seattle to 27 cents a pound in New York.

The farm-to-retail price spread for Large eggs averaged highest in New York, Boston, Chicago, and Cleveland. There were less direct marketing systems used, and in Boston and New York, the eggs had to be obtained from more distant production areas. The spreads were lowest in Los Angeles and San Francisco. Since local nearby production furnishes the needs of these two cities, the marketing system from the producer-processor to the retailer is more direct and the retail store margins are generally lower than in the other 10 cities.

Farm-to-retail price spreads for frying chickens tended to be lower in Atlanta and Washington, D.C., than in most other cities. Both cities are located close to major broiler production areas. Low farm-to-retailer spreads along with average or lower retail spreads (retailer-to-consumer spreads) caused marketing costs in these cities to drop below the average.

Denver and Los Angeles had the lowest marketing margins of the 12 cities. While farm-to-retailer margins in these cities were about average, retail margins in both were consistently low.

Marketing spreads were highest in San Francisco and Seattle. In Seattle, both the retail spread and the farm-to-retailer spread were higher than average. In San Francisco, the retail spread was about average but the farm-to-retailer spread was high. Boston and New York had the highest average retail spreads. Farm-to-retailer spreads were low in both cities, however, causing the farm-to-consumer spreads to drop below the average for San Francisco and Seattle.

The average 1966-71 farm-to-retail price spreads for medium-sized turkeys ranged from 19.6 cents a pound in Denver to 26.7 a pound in New York. Of the 12 study cities, New York reported the highest retail spread; Seattle, the lowest. The farm-to-retailer price spread for New York was lower than the 12-city average, while the farm-to-retailer spread for Seattle was higher than the average.

Retailers' spreads are influenced by store pricing policies. Sometimes retailers feature items at or below cost in an attempt to achieve a profit for their entire operation by adjusting the price spreads of various commodities. Retail store spreads from 1966 to 1971 averaged 9.1 cents a dozen for Grade A Large eggs, 10.7 cents a pound for fryers, and 10.1 cents a pound for medium-size turkeys.

Farm-to-retailer price spreads among the 12 cities in 1966-71 generally narrowed for Grade A Large eggs, averaging 12.8 cents a dozen, compared with 13.5 cents a dozen for the 1961-66 period. Farm-to-retailer price spreads widened for fryers and medium-size turkeys. For fryers, the farm-to-retailer price spread averaged 11.5 cents a pound, compared with 9 cents a pound during 1961-66. The farm-retailer spread for medium turkeys averaged 12.2 cents a pound. During 1961-66, the average was 11.5 cents a pound. In general, marketing charges tended to decline until about 1969, then began to rise slowly in 1970. This trend continued in 1971, reflecting such increased marketing charges as rising labor costs.

Prices and Price Spreads for Eggs, Frying Chickens, and Turkeys in 12 Major Cities, 1966-71

INTRODUCTION

Prices and price spreads for eggs, frying chickens, and turkeys are reported here for economists, researchers, price analysts, and others associated with the poultry industry. While the data are not analyzed or interpreted, they may be used as benchmarks to evaluate future price developments in the marketing system for poultry and eggs.2/

The six commodity classifications used are: Large and Medium eggs; frying chickens; and large, medium, and small turkeys. Monthly data are shown for 12 cities--Boston, New York, Baltimore, Washington, D.C., Atlanta, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Seattle. For eggs and frying chickens, prices and price spreads are shown monthly--and a yearly average is derived--for each city at the four levels of the marketing channels. A 5-year average is similarly computed from monthly data for the period 1966-70.

No annual averages were computed for turkeys since most statistics do not contain data for each month. However, a 3-month average (October-December) was computed for each year and for the 5-year average. In addition, the 10-city average 3/ was computed for each of the products for each level in the marketing channel and for the marketing spreads for the month, for the year, and for the 5-year average.

SOURCES OF DATA

Retail prices were prices paid by consumers in retail stores as collected

3/ The 10-city average excludes the cities of Seattle and Denver. The 10-city average was published because of insufficient data at certain levels for the 12 cities.

and published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.^{4/} Average prices in samples of chain stores and large and small independent retailers in each city were combined according to predetermined weightings based on their aggregate gross sales. These weightings varied among cities and have changed gradually in recent years. Increasingly greater weight has been given to chain stores in most cities.

Prices to retailers were those paid for store door delivery to either independent or chain store retailers. Prices paid by chain stores for deliveries to their warehouses were not included. Prices to retailers were obtained from the Market News Branch, Poultry Division, Agricultural Marketing Service (AMS), U.S. Department of Agriculture, except in Washington, D.C., where members of the Poultry Group, ERS, USDA, collected prices from major wholesalers and retailers in the city.

City receiver prices included f.o.b. delivered city prices and wholesale selling prices or both. Prices reported for these levels often overlap, as trade practices and pricing mechanisms make it difficult to differentiate among them satisfactorily. The f.o.b. delivered city price included prices paid to processors or shippers by city wholesale distributors, chain stores, and other large-volume retailers purchasing directly from sources outside the city. The wholesale selling price was the price paid to wholesalers by jobbers on sales between wholesalers and on sales to others who bought in wholesale lots. Prices were obtained from USDA's Market News Branch, AMS, State Market News Services, and from major wholesalers in Washington, D.C.

Farm values (prices paid to farmers) were payments received by farmers per dozen eggs or per pound of frying chickens and turkeys (many of which are grown under contract). Farm value is the value for a quantity of live poultry equivalent to a pound of ready-to-cook poultry, whether produced by a private individual for his own account or under contract for a vertically integrated firm. Farm value of frying chickens produced under contract for an integrated firm was derived by using an f.o.b. dock price at processing plants for dressed fryers and deducting processing and transportation costs. (See section on methods of calculation for more complete explanation.) Computed farm values were weighted averages of prices at farms in the principal producing areas supplying the major share of a given commodity in the various city markets.

Prices paid to farmers were obtained from USDA's Market News Branch, State Market News Service, and major processors in large production areas. In some areas, the farm price for frying chickens was obtained from USDA's Statistical Reporting Service.

METHODS OF CALCULATION

Farm prices for poultry products moving to market in each study city were arrived at by weighting the price according to previous years' estimates of the volume of the product moving to market from each of the major production areas supplying the market.

Poultry prices at the farm level were converted from live to ready-to-cook equivalent value. These conversions were based on standard conversion factors ^{5/} so that comparable value would be obtained from the same form of poultry throughout the entire marketing channel. Where farm prices for poultry, particularly frying chickens, were not available, a farm-equivalent value was computed using the f.o.b. dock price at processing plants for ready-to-cook whole birds in truck lots. A deduction of 9 cents per pound was made for processing and transportation. The result was converted to a live-weight value basis by using a conversion factor based on yearly average dressing percentages in Government-inspected poultry dressing plants.

All prices except retail prices were collected on specific dates each month. The Bureau of Labor Statistics collected retail prices on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of 1 specific week each month. The prices at the other market levels were generally collected 5 days before the retail pricing dates, thus allowing some time for the products to move physically through the marketing channels.

The farmer's share of the retail price was computed as a percentage figure for each of the selected time periods.

Changes in Calculation Methods

Since the tables in this report were developed from computer programmed data, several facts should be noted. First, when data was not available, the computer printed "0" rather than leaving the field blank or printing "NA--not available." Second, some of the margin computations, particularly averages, do not add to exact whole numbers in a table. This is due to rounding of the totals by the computer. These figures usually do not vary by more than one-tenth of a cent or one-tenth of 1 percentage point.

In a few cases, minus figures appear in the tables showing marketing spreads. It is not likely that a product is handled at a loss in any city for any great length of time. However, since prices are gathered on a given day to represent an entire month, it is sometimes possible to obtain a minus margin between two marketing levels where the margins are traditionally narrow and the market moves up and down rapidly.

DEFINITION OF TERMS

Farm-to-retail spread--The difference between the price the consumer pays for a product in a retail store and the farm value (the amount the farmer receives for an equivalent quantity of farm product). Or in the case of poultry grown under contract for an integrated firm, the farm equivalent value of a pound of ready-to-cook poultry even though the actual sale does not take place until the birds are processed.

^{5/} Badger, Henry. Conversion Factors and Weights and Measures for Agricultural Commodities and Their Products. U.S. Dept. Agr. Stat. Bull. 362, June 1965.

Retailer-to-consumer price spread or retail price spread--The difference between the price the consumer pays for a product in the retail store and the price the retailer paid for it.

Farm-to-retailer price spread--The difference between the price paid by the retailer and the farm value. This spread is the combined farm-to-receiver and receiver-to-retailer price spreads.

Receiver-to-retailer price spread--The difference between the price paid by the retailer and the city receiver price.

Farm-to-receiver price spread--The difference between the city receiver price and the farm value.

Farm share--The percentage of the retail price that the farm price or value represents for an equivalent quantity of the farm product.
