Agricultural Trade Between Asia/Near East Countries and the United States, 1962-86

INTRODUCTION

This report provides a condensed statistical picture of the role and importance of agricultural trade between the United States and selected countries and regions in Asia and the Near East.

Numerous sources are available which present agricultural trade statistics. However, the majority of these sources either present the data at such an aggregated basis or at such a disaggregated basis that the patterns and trends in the major components are difficult to discern. This bulletin presents the major components of agricultural trade while focusing on the significant elements of the trade.

We start with total agricultural products, inputs, fish and forestry as a basic unit of comparison, and then divide this into 12 components. Each table in this report, whether for a country or a country group, contains the same basic agricultural trade breakdown. We also show the composition of the 12 components of agricultural trade if such component was at least 1 percent of the total in 1985. Thus, each table has the same categories, but different subcategories. We provide the important details but omit all the insignificant details. The principal source of the data presented here is the United Nations' Trade Data, Series D.¹ We accessed the data through the National Institute of Health Data Center.

AGRICULTURAL TRADE SHARES

The objective of this report is to present selected aspects of the outcomes of agricultural trade between Asia and the Near East and the United States. The Asia and Near East regions are among the fastest growing markets for U.S. agricultural exports. With the exception of the Philippines, none of the countries of the Asian regions have experienced serious debt repayment problems. Furthermore, most of the Asian countries have followed export-oriented growth strategies which have generated rates of income growth far in excess of those experienced by the rest of the developing economies. South Korea and Taiwan have been among the leaders of the Asia miracle economies experiencing real per capita income growth approaching 10 percent per year for extended periods of time. Thailand, Indonesia, and Malaysia are also successful economically based on agriculture and primary production. The success of these countries in generating export revenues makes them ideal commercial markets for U.S. agricultural products.

¹We used UN data rather than that available from internal U.S. Government sources because the classification scheme used commodity breakdowns of Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) which are the same as those used by the UN. Since the United States provides the data to the UN, the basic data are the same.

Our interest in North Africa and the Middle East has slightly different roots. The North African countries of Egypt, Morocco, Tunisia, and Algeria have been major wheat producers since Roman times. The intensive consumption of wheat products, however, has made them into major wheat-importing countries. The first three of these countries are major markets for U.S. wheat exports. Because of the difficulties some of these countries have had in generating foreign exchange, much of the U.S. exports to these countries has been under export promotion programs such as PL480, export credit guarantees, and, more recently, the export enhancement program.

The countries of Asia and the Near East provide us with a wide variety of circumstances which lead to large imports from the United States. Therefore, focusing attention on them is an important and worthwhile exercise.

To simplify the discussion and to demonstrate the usefulness of the information we have assembled, we will briefly describe and analyze the patterns which emerged for the major categories of countries, based on the data presented in the tables for 1962-86. To present the data graphically, we combined the table information into six items: (1) grains and oilseeds, (2) fibers and tobacco, (3) animals and dairy, (4) vegetables, fruits, sweeteners, and beverages, (5) fisheries and forestry, and (6) agricultural inputs.

The Asia/Near East geographic region is divided into four area groupings: South Asia, East Asia, the Middle East, and North Africa. Each of these area groupings is composed of selected countries only. Trade totals shown for each area grouping are sums only for these selected countries.

With the exception of some fiber and tobacco trade exports to the East Asia area, U.S. agricultural exports to Asia and the Near East from 1962 through 1986 were dominated by the grains and oilseeds (figs. 1-8). Wheat exports dominated the grains and soybeans the oilseeds.

Agricultural export patterns to the United States from the four areas varied from area to area. However, the export patterns of South Asia and East Asia have similarities (figs. 1 and 3). The "Vegetables, fruits, sweeteners, and beverages" exports reflected the importance of tea and coffee production in these areas. The "Fish and forestry" exports were generally dominated by natural rubber and fresh and canned fish exports to the United States.

U.S. agricultural imports from the Middle East (fig. 5) have been mainly influenced by that area's increasing role as a fertilizer and pesticide producer. Of particular importance is Israel's role in manufactured and crude fertilizer exports. North African (fig. 7) exports to the United States have no evident pattern.

Grains and oilseeds dominate the U.S. exports to the Asia and the Near East countries, accounting for an average of 50, 70, 80, and 90 percent of the import composition of East Asia, South Asia, North Africa, and Middle East, respectively. Inputs are also important U.S. exports to South and East Asia. Furthermore, almost 30 percent of the East Asian imports consist of fibers and tobacco.

Asian exports to the United States are largely fish and forestry products, and vegetables, fruits, sweeteners, and beverages. Middle East exports to the United States have been increasingly dominated by fertilizer inputs. The composition of North African exports changed dramatically over the period. From 1967-69, fibers were the main exports, but this fell substantially over the 1970's. During the 1980's, the composition of exports from North Africa was largely divided between grains and oilseeds; fibers; vegetables, fruits, sweeteners, and beverages; and fish and forestry. There is a high degree of complementarity of agricultural trade between the countries of Asia and the Near East and the United States. The countries of this grouping have been expanding markets for U.S. agricultural exports, while the United States has been an expanding market for their agricultural exports. The United States has, in general, maintained a substantial agricultural trade surplus with these countries.

DERIVATION AND USE OF TABLES

The data in the country group and individual country tables are based on the same data base. The major function of these tables is to show the absolute trade amounts for selected commodities and aggregates. The first four tables in this report summarize the merchandise and total agricultural trade of the selected regions and countries with the United States. The remainder of the tables show the composition of agricultural trade.

Table Format

In the first data column, we show a simple arithmetic average of the 24-year period. This average can be used as a benchmark or "reference value" for evaluating and comparing the values shown in the remaining columns.

The vertical components of each region and country table begin with the grand total of agricultural products, inputs, fish, and forestry products (APIFF) in current dollars. Respective aggregate measures and commodity values are shown in sequence.

Compositions of individual aggregate measures and commodities are given below.

The "Commodities" area has major headings such as "Grains" and "Oil crops and products." Under these major headings are subheads such as "Wheat and meslin," "Margarine," and "Palm oil." Space restrictions prevent a complete listing of all commodities traded. In the country tables, if the value of a given commodity is not at least 1 percent of the 1985 APIFF value, it is not shown. In the region tables, individual commodity data are simple summations of the country table data. Consequently, some commodity data may appear in region tables that seem insignificant relative to APIFF totals.

Units of Measure and Valuation

Countries report trade to the United Nations using various valuation bases. For some countries this leads to some inconsistency in the measures of exports and imports. As a whole, the UN data base shows general imports on a c.i.f. basis and exports on an f.o.b. basis. However, many countries report imports on an f.o.b. basis instead (including the United States for a period) and some countries report imports for consumption. Also, countries are assigned to imports on several bases: country of origin, country of production, country of first consignment (all presumably about the same thing), or country of last consignment. For exports, countries are usually assigned on the basis of last consignment, but sometimes on basis of destination or consumption; presumably these are all roughly equal to each other. Also, some countries can change their valuation basis over the years (as the United States has done); so this comparability can change over time. Consequently, data are not precisely comparable.

Symbols Used in Tables

-- = Value of trade reported for item was less than 0.5 percent of "Total agricultural products, inputs, fish, and forestry."

NA = No trade was reported or trade value was less than $500.00

MAJOR CATEGORIES AND SELECTED SUBELEMENTS IN INTERNATIONAL AGRICULTURAL TRADE

In many situations, products and services that comprise agricultural trade are difficult to specifically define. For example, some countries list highly processed products, such as manufactured fertilizers, as part of their agricultural trade. A similar problem arises with canned fruits and vegetables. The basic product is "agricultural." However, after it is canned and boxed for shipment, does the product shift to "manufactured" status? Given the many problems of selecting the elements that make up international agricultural trade, it was decided to use the Food and Agriculture Organization's categorization scheme as a general guideline in this publication.

Grains--Wheat and meslin, wheat flour, rice, barley, maize, rye, oats, cereals, malt, and bran and milling products.

Oil crops and products--Soybeans, soybean cake, soybean oil, groundnuts, groundnut cake, groundnut oil, palm nuts and kernels, palmkernel cake, palm oil, palmkernel oil, cottonseed, cottonseed cake, cottonseed oil, linseed, linseed cake, linseed oil, sunflowerseed, sunflowerseed cake, sunflowerseed oil, rape and mustard seed, rapeseed cake, rape and colza oils, copra, copra cake, sesame seed, castor beans, olive oil, coconut oil, castor oil, maize oil, oilseed cake, and margarine.

Fibers: Cotton lint, silks, wool (greasy), wool (degreased), jute and bast, flax fiber, and sisal and other agaves.

Tobacco, unprocessed (in leaf form).

Vegetables and fruits: Potatoes, pulses, tomatoes, onions, oranges and tangerines, lemons and limes, other citrus, bananas, apples, grapes, raisins, coconuts in shell, shelled coconuts, pears, peaches, pineapples, pineapples-canned, dates, and hops.

Sweeteners, condiments, and other related products: Raw sugar, refined sugar, natural honey, peppers, pimentos, vanilla, cocoa paste, cocoa butter, and chocolate.

Beverages: Coffee, tea, cocoa beans, cocoa powder, wines, and beer.

Live animals and meat products: Bovine cattle, sheep and goats, pigs, chilled fresh meat, dried salted meat, canned meats, animal oils and fats, lard, and meat meal.

Dairy and poultry products: Milk and cream, whey, dry milk and cream, evaporated milk and cream, butter, cheese and curd, eggs in shell, liquid eggs, and dried eggs.

Forestry products (a grand total including natural rubber and gums).

Fish and fish products (a grand total).

Farm inputs: Tractors, manufactured fertilizer, crude fertilizers, and pesticides.
