U.S. Egg and Poultry Statistical Series, 1960-89

Mark R. Weimar
Shauna Cromer*

Introduction

This bulletin reports major statistical series describing the egg and poultry industries since 1960. It updates U.S. Egg and Poultry Statistical Series, 1960-87 (SB-775). The bulletin is divided into four major sections: eggs, broilers (young chickens), other chicken (mature or nonbroiler chickens), and turkey. Within each section, the bulletin is further divided into indicators of production, supply and disappearance, and prices and costs. Each section, except other chicken, contains statistical series describing production capacity such as flock size and chick or pout placements; supply and disappearance series containing estimates of production, exports, shipments, and uses in different categories; and prices and costs containing estimates of prices paid, prices received, and costs of production. The section on other chicken does not include any series that would forecast production levels. The indicators that could be used for forecasting production can be found in the eggs and broilers sections.

The statistical series published in this bulletin have been collected by various U.S. Government agencies and maintained by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). These statistical series may appear to be continuous throughout the stated time period, but the limitations of each series should be recognized before being used in econometric or other statistical models. For instance, some series may have been collected by different agencies using different methodologies during the time period indicated. As an example, the retail values are a combination of estimates collected by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor, and the Economic Research Service, USDA.

Earlier data can be found in Poultry and Egg Statistics through Mid-1961 (SB-305) and Egg and Poultry Statistics through Mid-1972 (SB-525), published by the Economic Research Service, USDA.
