Introduction

Various trade indexes are used in the literature to analyze country reliance on foreign trade, economic openness, trade policy orientation, price level variation, and movements in the real exchange rate. Economists, such as Kuznets (1964), Kravis and Lipsey (1987), and Edwards (1988 and 1989), have used the ratio of trade to gross domestic product (GDP); Cottani and others (1990) used the inverse of this ratio. These conventional statistics lack mathematical attributes that would adequately represent the economic concepts they purportedly measure. This bulletin develops a new index, called the trade dependency index (TDI). This index satisfies the mathematical properties of uniqueness and unambiguous upper and lower limits. It can be used to identify a continuous spectrum along which countries can be classified as autarkic, open to trade, or completely specialized in producing only exports and consuming only imports.

In this bulletin, nine TDI's are calculated for 138 countries during 1960-88. These indexes correspond to three levels of aggregation: total, merchandise, and agricultural trade. Each level can be separated into export and import components to identify sources of trade dependency. These nine indexes can be used to examine potential marketing areas, examine which countries have liberal trade policies, and group countries across nonoverlapping trade regimes.

Dependency indexes cannot be calculated for all countries, all sectors, or all years due to data limitations. For example, agricultural trade indexes cannot be calculated for the Bahamas, although total TDI values were calculated. For Canada, agricultural trade indexes were calculated for 1961-84 and 1988. Calculations were not possible for 1960 and 1985-87. The TDI describes the relative degree to which producers and consumers in a country (or an economic sector such as agriculture) depend on trade. Because the TDI formula is strictly monotonic and concave, it provides a unique relationship between the amount of trade and the index value. The range of index values calculated by the TDI formula is from zero to 100. An index of zero indicates an autarkic economy, that is, one that neither exports nor imports any product. An index value of 100 denotes a completely specialized country, that is, one that exports all the goods it produces and imports all the goods it consumes. Between these two extremes, some domestic production is consumed at home, while the rest is exchanged for foreign products.

The properties of the TDI make comparisons across countries rather easy. Using the total agricultural TDI as an example, a TDI of 75 for a particular country means that for every $100 worth of agricultural goods, $75 comes from trade. Moreover, a country with an agricultural index value of 75 is three times more dependent on agricultural trade than one with an index of 25. This statement implies that the country with an index of 75 has less potential for increasing its agricultural trade dependency than one with an index of 25. This does not mean, however, that trade in agricultural products will not increase. Hong Kong, one of the fastest growing markets for U.S. agricultural exports, had a very high agricultural TDI of 96 in 1986.

Total agricultural TDI includes both exports and imports and can be separated into export and import indexes that sum to the total agricultural TDI. Using three countries as examples, we can show the range of values likely to be observed among the countries for which we have data. With relatively little agricultural exports, countries such as Hong Kong and Singapore are almost totally dependent on agricultural imports to meet their agricultural needs. Accordingly, Hong Kong had an import index of 96, and Singapore had an import index of 95 in 1986. Indonesia, on the other hand, produced nearly all of the agricultural products its population demands, as shown by its import index of 5. Thus, the small "city-states" of Hong Kong and Singapore are nearly 20 times more dependent on agricultural imports than Indonesia.

Derivation of the Trade Dependency Index: TDI

The best way to understand the new TDI is to develop it from known economic principles and then examine its mathematical properties.

Economic Derivation

The TDI is derived from the familiar macroeconomic components of GDP. Let C = consumption, I = investment, G = government expenditures, X = exports, and M = imports, then

$$GDP = C + I + G + X - M \quad (1)$$

By deleting "-M" from GDP we obtain the final value of goods and services produced by a country: C + I + G + X. In general, each of these components contains imports. By adding these imports we get

$$GDP = C_d + I_d + G_d + X_d + M \quad (2)$$

The subscript d denotes value added. Define E = C<sub>d</sub> + I<sub>d</sub> + G<sub>d</sub> as the production of goods and services consumed by the country. Let total trade (Tr) = X<sub>d</sub> + M, then TDI, the new trade dependency index formula, is<sup>1</sup>

$$TDI = \frac{Tr}{E + Tr} \quad (3)$$

The familiar two-good, open economy of international trade theory allows us to present TDI in terms of prices and quantities (fig. 1). The home country produces goods Y and Z at the world price ratio P<sub>o</sub>, which is equal to the price ratio P<sub>z</sub>/P<sub>y</sub>. Good Z is always the export good and good Y is always the import good. Restating GDP and its component parts in terms of figure 1, we note the following relationships. Points C and B denote production and consumption of goods Y and Z. Point A represents the quantities of Y and Z, both produced and consumed by the home country. The relationships in equation 4 are derived from figure 1.

---

<sup>1</sup>Note that TDI is also equal to Tr divided by GDP + imports. As early as 1959, Kuznets noted that the foreign trade ratio should be measured as total trade divided by the "sum of gross national product and imports of all goods." Since this information was not available, he used merchandise trade divided by national income (pp. 93-94 in Economic Growth). His 1964 article used trade divided by GDP. He did not examine the mathematical properties of either index.

$$\begin{aligned}
C_d + I_d + G_d &= P_y Y^* + P_z Z_o : (A) \\
X &= P_z (Z^* - Z_o) : (C - A) \\
M &= P_y (Y_o - Y^*) : (B - A) \\
Tr &= P_z (Z^* - Z_o) + P_y (Y_o - Y^*) \\
GDP &= P_y Y^* + P_z Z^*
\end{aligned}
\tag{4}$$

The value of goods produced and consumed at home, point A, is  $P_y Y^* + P_z Z_o$  and corresponds to E in equation 3. Adding trade to both sides of equation 4, line 1, yields equation 5 (also the denominator in equation 3).

$$E + Tr = P_y Y^* + P_z Z_o + P_z (Z^* - Z_o) + P_y (Y_o - Y^*) \tag{5}$$

TDI in terms of figure 1 becomes

$$TDI = \frac{P_z (Z^* - Z_o) + P_y (Y_o - Y^)}{P_y Y^ + P_z Z_o + P_z (Z^* - Z_o) + P_y (Y_o - Y^*)} \tag{6}$$

It is simple to separate the TDI into the sum of two component indexes (exports and imports). Doing that enables us to study both the major and minor sources of trade dependency. These component indexes are defined as follows:<sup>2</sup>

$TDI_x$  = trade dependency attributable to exports;
 $TDI_M$  = trade dependency attributable to imports. The calculation is:

$$TDI_x = \frac{X}{E + Tr}$$

and

$$TDI_M = \frac{M}{E + Tr} \tag{7}$$

Hence,

$$TDI = TDI_x + TDI_M \tag{8}$$

If the primary source of dependency is exports, we would show a relatively high  $TDI_x$  and a relatively low  $TDI_M$ . For example, assume that a particular country has a total agricultural trade index (in percent) of 90. This value indicates that the country's agricultural sector is highly trade dependent. If  $TDI_x$  is 80 percent and  $TDI_M$  is 10 percent, the data show that the country's major source of agricultural dependency is the export sector.

We can further assess the relative strength of import and export dependency by measuring their relative shares. We define  $w_x$  and  $w_m$  as the relative shares of exports and imports respectively:

$$w_x = \frac{TDI_x}{TDI}$$

$$w_m = \frac{TDI_m}{TDI} \quad (9)$$

$$w_x + w_m = 1$$

Using our hypothetical numbers,  $w_x$  is 80/90 or 89 percent, and  $w_m$  is 10/90 or 11 percent. The export sector contributes 89 percent to the economy's trade dependency even though in absolute terms its contribution is 80 percent. The import sector's relative contribution, 11 percent, exceeds its absolute contribution.

Mathematical Properties of the TDI

The TDI has several desirable properties. It has finite limits. It is a strictly monotonically increasing function with respect to trade and, thus, has well-defined and unique values for all ranges of trade. TDI approaches the upper limit asymptotically so there is no discontinuity from relative dependency to perfect dependency.

Taking a closer look at equation 3, we can relate the values of TDI to the autarky/perfect dependency continuum. For an autarky (an economy totally independent of trade),  $Tr = 0$ ; hence  $TDI = 0$ , as equation 10 shows:

$$TDI \Big|_{Tr = 0} = \frac{0}{E} = 0 \quad (10)$$

Perfect dependency, in which the country imports all the goods it consumes and exports all the goods it produces, yields:

$$TDI \Big|_{E = 0} = \frac{Tr}{Tr} = 1 \quad (11)$$

All intermediate positions on the dependency spectrum are described by equation 8.

First and second derivatives of equation 8 with respect to trade are used to determine the continuity, strict monotonicity, and concavity of TDI. The results in equations 12 and 13 reveal each of these properties and prove the one-to-one relationship between trade and TDI.

Taking the limits of equation 3 and of the first derivative, equation 12, we obtain:

$$\frac{\partial^2 TDI}{\partial Tr^2} = -\frac{2E}{(E + Tr)^3} < 0, \text{ for } E > 0 \quad (12)$$

$$\lim_{Tr \rightarrow \infty} TDI = \lim_{Tr \rightarrow \infty} \frac{Tr}{E + Tr} = \lim_{Tr \rightarrow \infty} \frac{1}{\frac{E}{Tr} + 1} = 1$$

$$\lim_{E \rightarrow 0} TDI = \lim_{E \rightarrow 0} \frac{1}{\frac{E}{Tr} + 1} = 1 \quad (13)$$

$$\lim_{Tr \rightarrow \infty} \frac{\partial TDI}{\partial Tr} = \lim_{Tr \rightarrow \infty} \frac{E}{(E + Tr)^2} = 0$$

This says that the first derivative is zero in the limit, that is the function has a maximum (or minimum, but the second derivative is negative, so a maximum exists) and since, as just noted, the limit of equation 3 is one, the function is strictly concave (fig. 2). These properties exist for the entire range of TDI, from autarky to perfect dependence, because  $E + Tr > 0$ .

Kuznets, Kravis and Lipsey, and Cottani and others have been cited as using the traditional trade dependency index (trade/GDP). These authors have variously referred to this index as trade dependency and openness, demonstrating the wide application of any trade dependency index.

Kuznets used trade/GDP to determine if there was an association between this ratio and several measures of country size. He found no relationship between the ratio and per capita income, but he found significant and inverse relationships with population and gross domestic product.

Kravis and Lipsey assert a positive relationship between openness to trade and cross-country divergences in price levels. They regressed the price level for a group of countries on per capita income, openness, and the share of nontradables in GDP. In most cases, they found the association to be positive and significant.

Cottani and others regressed the real exchange rate on the international terms of trade, the inverse of the trade dependency index (GDP/trade), net capital inflows as a proportion of GDP, domestic credit creation in excess of devaluation, foreign inflation, real GDP growth, and time. They used GDP/trade as an indicator of such trade policy restrictions as tariffs and quotas. An inverse relationship between openness and the real exchange rate was expected since, they reasoned, import quotas reduce openness and lead to a higher real exchange rate. The coefficient of openness had the expected sign, but significant levels were not reported for any variables.

Trade Dependency Index Tables

This report contains two sets of TDI's, one using data calculated from the International Financial Statistics (IFS) of the International Monetary Fund, the other using data from the World Bank. The country listings for each set are similar but not identical. Tables 1 and 2 list the countries used in each set. The IFS data begin at 1960, while the World Bank data begin at 1968.

TDI values for a particular country are not necessarily the same across sources because differences in reported exports, imports, GDP, and exchange rates will alter the TDI.

A trading country's imports and exports:
Determining prices and quantities

The relationship between trade and TDI

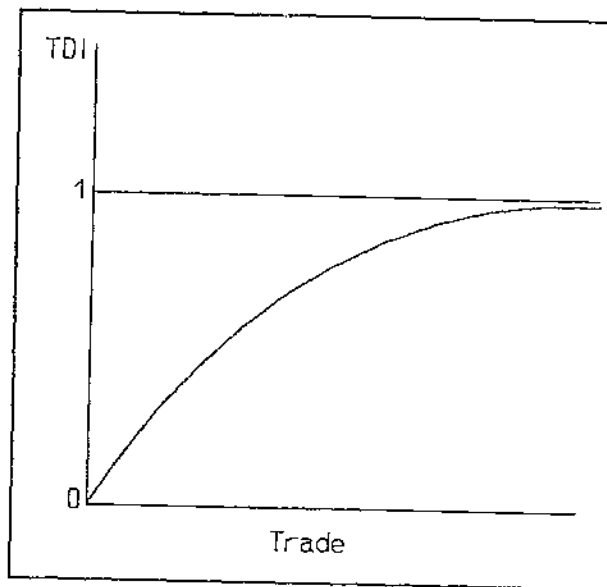

Table 3 contains the indexes calculated using International Financial Statistics data, and table 4 contains the indexes calculated with World Bank data. Each table shows trade dependency data under three major headings—total trade including services, merchandise trade, and agricultural trade. The first column under each heading is the total TDI and the two other columns express its export and import components, which sum to the total. For example, total trade dependency for the United States in 1988 was 17.9 percent. The numerical values of the export and import TDI's are 8 and 10 percent (table 3). The difference between the sum of the export and import indexes and the total TDI is due to a rounding error. Using the headings and line numbers, such as 90c, as they appear in the International Financial Statistics, the U.S. indexes were calculated from the following data.

National accounts

Billion U.S. dollars

90c	Exports of goods and services	428.9
98c	Imports of goods and services	536.1
99b	Gross domestic product	4,840.2

Calculations ($ = billion):

Total value of trade:  $Tr = $965$ ,  $E + Tr = GDP + M = $5,376.3$ ,
 Total trade dependency index:  $TDI = Tr/(E + Tr)$ ,  $TDI = ($965/$5,376.3) \times 100 = 17.9$  percent.
 The export index:  $TDI_x = X/(E + Tr) = ($428.9/$5,376.3) \times 100 = 8$  percent.
 The import index:  $TDI_m = (M/(E + Tr)) \times 100 = 10$  percent.

Some index values reach 100 percent. In these cases, the data show that exports exceeded GDP. Such results are possible if gross exports are used, but the index depends on exports net of imports used in their production, that is, value added by the exporting country. Thus, it is impossible for export value added to exceed GDP. When exports exceeded GDP, the export value included imports. Because it is impossible to subtract the import value from gross exports, the export value was arbitrarily set to equal GDP.<sup>3</sup> If new information gives a more accurate figure for either exports or GDP, the index value will be adjusted accordingly.

<sup>3</sup>The export value as well as all other values recorded in the National Accounts of the International Financial Statistics bulletin are considered as value added for that is the notion of gross domestic (national) product. To the extent that the data do not reflect value added, the TDI is distorted. However, it is impossible to identify the direction and amount of the distortion without more detailed information.
