Publisher's Note

As can be seen from the cover of this issue of Agricultural Economics, the journal has a new Editor-in-Chief, Dr. Bruce Greenshields. He takes over this position from Dr. Douglas Hedley, who has stepped down for personal reasons.

We would like to take this opportunity to express our sincere thanks to Douglas Hedley for the work he did as Editor-in-Chief.

For those readers who may not know Bruce Greenshields personally, the following background information should be of interest.

Bruce Greenshields obtained a degree of B. A. in Political Science and M.A. in Economics. He began his career at the Economic Research Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture in 1967 as an Agricultural Economics Researcher in the areas of trade, policy and food demand and later as an Assistant Administrator. Recently he was appointed Deputy Administrator in the same Department.

Bruce Greenshields organized the contributed paper competitions and sessions for the past three IAAE conferences. He co-edited (with Margot Bellamy) the proceedings of the contributed paper sessions for the past five IAAE conferences, which were published as books in the IAAE Occasional Paper Series. He also launched and was the first Editor of the IAAE Newsletter.

We wish Bruce Greenshields every success in his new role.
