PRESIDENT DAY'S REMARKS

I wish to continue the tradition that outgoing presidents make an assessment of the current status of the Council, now the Northeastern Agricultural and Resource Economics Association (NAREA).

Twelve years ago Dan Padberg proposed and the Council adopted a motion to establish a Journal of the Northeastern Agricultural Economics Council, a journal which would be more than simply a proceedings issue. For several years under the guidance of Bob Christensen, Wallace Dunham, Dale Colyer, Fillmore Bender and now Cleve Willis, the Journal has grown in quality. This year for the first time, the format and appearance of the Journal is matched with the quality of the contents to make our Journal a truly first rate regional journal. Compared to sister disciplines in the College of Agriculture, journal space for agricultural economists is quite limited. Regional journals play an important role in our profession. We owe a considerable debt to Cleve Willis and his predecessors.

During the past two years, a large number of special committee members have worked hard to develop proposals that they believed would improve the workings of the Council. We owe these committee members a special thanks. This year, six changes in the Constitution and By-laws were presented for action by the membership. These proposals ranged from a tidying up of previous actions to substantial changes in the way this organization conducts its affairs. Five of these proposals were approved. I believe these actions will improve the effectiveness of the organization. But this group, like all other groups, is not blessed with 20-20 foresight. Some may even question our hindsight. We must, however, continually reassess the actions taken today and in the past and if these acts do not achieve the desired effect, we will take the appropriate action.

A quality journal and a clear and appropriate set of rules to guide organizational activities may be necessary conditions but they do not ENSURE organizational effectiveness in serving the interests of our clientele. This Association, its programs and its journal should not be a mirror image of the AAEA. Rather, it should reflect the uniqueness of the region, its unique combination of human and natural resources, its unique variety of problems and opportunities. The population density of this geographically small region, the high production and disposition of hazardous waste, the upsurge of part time farmers and rural residents, provide a real challenge to rural policy makers now and in the future.

The problems facing the region far exceed our ability to analyze them. Increasingly this organization should be a vehicle for interstate cooperation, for the trading of intellectual capital across state lines. It should promote the development of applied or practical economists where practical is not defined as one who practices the mistakes of his predecessors, but as one who utilizes the best theoretical and empirical tools to produce information that meets the needs of decision makers. An applied economist is also one who not only utilizes the most effective information dissemination of techniques inside and outside the classroom but also trains and inspires leadership in the solution of problems. While I would doubt that many of us are wholly satisfied with what the Association does to promote high quality applied research, I for one am much less satisfied with what the Association does to promote high quality applied education programs, particularly extension education programs. It is tempting to propose that the Association provide extension and teaching awards. I will not do so. Rather, I would hope that as a beginning: future program committees will give as much attention to descriptions of successful extension education programs as they currently give to successful research programs. Initially, they may have to give special attention to extension in their call for papers.

In many ways this has been an unusual year—a new format for the journal, substantial changes in the by-laws and joint meetings with AAEA and AERE. Our President-Elect has organized an outstanding program in a situation that offered a variety of hazards. Virgil Norton has tried to maintain the uniqueness of the Association program, work in a cooperative fashion with the AAEA and AERE and not add unduly to the number of sessions we would like to attend at the same time. It is with great pleasure that I turn the gavel over to your new President, Virgil Norton. Thank you.

Appreciation—Membership Participation Committee

A motion was made and seconded and passed unanimously giving Gerald Cole and his Membership Participation Committee a vote of appreciation.
