ABSTRACT

This report contains names of foreign parent companies believed to be involved in the U.S. food and fiber system, names and addresses of their U.S. subsidiaries, and an indication of the products they handle. Countries of origin and U.S. addresses are given. Since foreign direct investment in U.S. farming and the food and fiber system is of very recent interest, the list of firms is not exhaustive but provides a basic point of departure for study of the topic.

Keywords: Foreign direct investment, agriculture, food system, directory.

PREFACE

Foreign investment in U.S. farming and the food and fiber system is attracting increasing interest and concern. This report lists foreign parent firms and U.S. subsidiaries thought to be involved in such activities in the United States.

The list is based primarily on published sources. Extensive effort was made to exhaust possible public sources of names through contact with about 300 people and institutions. Although these sources are fairly recent, some firms may have changed. The list is undoubtedly not complete, since U.S.-based firms with foreign ownership are not required to register or report their alien ownership to either State or Federal Governments. An exception is Federal income tax reporting, but such individual reports are not public information.

This report is primarily for the use of researchers. Private and public decision-makers may also find the material of use. The material can serve as a reference for work on foreign firms with U.S. subsidiaries. We welcome further information about the firms listed, other firms that should be included, or the financial and operational characteristics of such firms.

The author is indebted to the numerous firms and individuals who contributed to this report. Bob Atkins and Tom Pierpoint, U.S. Department of Commerce, were particularly helpful in providing information on published sources.

FOREIGN FIRMS WITH INVESTMENTS IN THE U.S. FOOD AND FIBER SYSTEM

by KENNETH R. KRAUSE¹

INTRODUCTION

Foreign investment in the United States is attracting increasing interest. Concern has been heightened by the devaluation of the dollar against other currencies and by the large amount of dollars owned by several foreign governments, nonresident aliens, and foreign firms which may be seeking investment outlets. Part of the change in who holds investable dollars is associated with the large increase in oil prices by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and the extra dollars some of those countries are accumulating. Foreign investors recognize that the United States has one of the more stable economies in which to invest. They may also have the desire and capacity to improve their standard of living through purchase and transport of U.S. goods and services, or through direct investment in the production, processing, and distribution of U.S. goods and services.

The U.S. food and fiber system has received particular attention in the past 2 years, as foreign countries have sought to increase their imports of raw or processed agricultural commodities. In some cases, they may be attempting to guarantee a supply of U.S.-produced agricultural commodities through investments in production or processing. Other foreign firms and foreign governments may have particular production, processing, marketing, or business technology that is unique or competitive in one or more subsectors of the U.S. food and fiber system or the beverage industry.

Since World War II, the policy of the U.S. Government has primarily been to help foreign countries develop through Federal and private sector aid and investment. Thus, the current shift to interest in foreign investment in the United States finds us with an inadequate identification of the nature, extent, and rate of change of such activity. Further, more is known about foreign investment in other sectors of the economy than in the food and fiber system. Direct foreign investment in all sectors of the U.S. economy apparently accounts for only about 1 percent of the total dollar value of domestic assets.^{2/} No specific data are available for the food and fiber system and, consequently, no estimates have been made of the magnitude of foreign investment in this sector.

^{1/} Agricultural Economist, Structure and Adjustments Program Area, National Economic Analysis Division, Economic Research Service.

Foreign investment in the United States is generally either direct or portfolio, although the distinction is somewhat arbitrary. Direct investment generally means full or sufficient ownership by a nonresident alien, corporation, or government to control the U.S. firm. Portfolio investment generally means some foreign ownership, but not enough for effective control of management decisionmaking, at least in the hands of one foreign entity. Portfolio investment sometimes refers to investment through trusts, financial holding companies, and other indirect means. A subsidiary company, for purposes of this report, is one in which foreigners have sufficient ownership, to exercise partial or complete control.

In many cases, the U.S. subsidiaries were probably established by U.S. firms, but subsequently acquired by and now controlled by the foreign parent firm. Some of the American subsidiaries are jointly owned by two or more foreign parent companies from the same or different countries, or owned by a parent company listed as headquartered in one country but in reality owned by foreign citizens or companies in still another country. Some U.S. subsidiaries are joint ventures with U.S.-owned firms, or are primarily U.S.-owned but continue relations with the foreign parent through contractual arrangements which may or may not provide effective foreign control. Some subsidiaries are legal branches of the foreign parent, while other are incorporated in the United States, either in the State where they operate or in another State. Some foreign owners may have full equity in the subsidiary, while others using credit and other forms of financing may have little equity. In some cases, the U.S. subsidiary is listed and shares of its stock traded on the U.S. stock exchanges or in over-the-counter markets.

This report provides a start toward identifying foreign direct investors in the U.S. food and fiber system.^{3/} Data on the magnitude of such investment are expected to be developed under the Foreign Investment Study Act of 1974 and published during the coming year. Such data will be for groups of firms.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

Efforts to develop public lists of foreign direct investors in the United States apparently began less than a decade ago and have not been extensive.^{4/} The majority of the effort focused on U.S.-based subsidiaries involved in manufacturing and petroleum activities. No systematic effort has been made to develop such a list of investors in the food and fiber system.

Information about firms in this report, for the most part, was obtained from published sources. None of the sources claim complete coverage. These sources were generally based on published reports, newspapers, magazines, trade contacts, and chambers of commerce. Few of them attempted to verify the information with the listed firms. Since there is a lag time in compiling lists, the sources were at least a year old.

The published sources listed many firms with products or services outside the food and fiber system, and some listed several different U.S. subsidiaries for foreign companies. Only the subsidiaries with food and fiber system activities are included in this report. Some firms engaging in food and fiber system activities but with primary interests in other areas may not have been identified here, because evidence of their involvement in the food and fiber system could not be established. Financial firms, such as banks and insurance companies, were generally not included in the published sources.

Since the subsidiaries were not contacted directly, they were not classified by Standard Industrial Codes. No confirmation was made of the addresses or of the firm names, products, or services. The food and fiber system was defined in the broadest possible terms. It included firms engaged in such diverse activities as selling calf feeders, operating grain elevators, and manufacturing fertilizer, food processing machinery, and candy. Beverage firms were generally included in this report. While a number of firms on public lists were involved in lumber and pulp activities, they were not usually included.

The inclusion of a firm's name on this list does not necessarily indicate significant foreign direct investment. Some firms on the list, while apparently foreign-owned, may have only minor amounts of foreign direct investment in the United States. For example, liaison offices, representative offices, and similar organizations may not be carrying out operations or generating revenues in the United States, may have no assets, or may not meet other criteria necessary for classification as a direct investment enterprise, at least for purposes of studies under the Foreign Investment Study Act of 1974.

^{4/} An exception is a list of firms required to report to the Bureau of Economic Analysis, U.S. Dept. Commerce, under the Bretton Woods Agreement Act. However, very few firms are included and the list is not public since the Act guarantees confidentiality.

COMPILATION OF THE DIRECTORY

A total of 61 countries were screened in developing the directory (table 1). Of these, 20 countries had parent companies with U.S. subsidiaries involved in food and fiber system activities, according to published sources. The remaining 41 countries were included because their agricultural trade volume with the United States exceeded $50 million annually during FY 1970-73 ⁵/or because they were expected to have large investable surpluses from oil revenues.

Embassies of each of the 61 countries in the United States were contacted by mail. The foreign agricultural attache or equivalent was addressed. In cases where no agricultural attache was available, the commercial or (if none) cultural attache was contacted. For each of the 20 countries for which published information was available, the foreign attaches were furnished such material and asked to review and expand it. Where the list was extensive, the attache was also consulted in person. The attache was asked to provide the name and address of the parent company and the U.S. subsidiary, describe the product or service, and identify the subsidiary's primary activity-- manufacturing, importing, or exporting. In addition, information was requested on the legal form of business organization, financial characteristics, and joint ventures with other firms. In many cases, the attache contacted government officials or a chamber of commerce in his home country. In a few cases, the attache suggested a home country name and address and asked that we make the contact. All of the attaches were contacted personally after the initial request was mailed. About 90 percent of the attaches responded that they have little or no contact with firms from their home countries which have subsidiaries in the United States and that no systematic effort is underway to develop lists of parent and subsidiary firms for their countries.¹

To supplement primary information sources, 31 U.S. agricultural or commercial attaches in other countries were contacted. Most of the attaches are employed by the Foreign Agricultural Service (FAS), so the request for information was forwarded through the Agricultural Attache's Office of FAS and subsequently sent to the attaches through the U.S. Department of State. These 31 countries were selected on the belief that they were the countries most likely to have firms with U.S. subsidiaries involved in food and fiber system activities. The fact that an agricultural attache was assigned to a country, and the professional judgment of the FAS Deputy Assistant Administrator for Agricultural Attaches, also influenced the selection process. In some cases, the U.S. attaches were able to provide names that were not available from other sources.

⁵/ See "Foreign Agricultural Trade of the United States," Glenn R. Samson, DeWain H. Rahe, and Thomas A. Warden, principal coordinators, Econ. Res. Serv., U.S. Dept. Agr., Dec. 1973. Angola, Bangladesh, Hong Kong, People's Republic of China, and South Vietnam were excluded for various reasons, such as lack of an embassy contact in Washington, D.C., or receipt of imports from the United States through grants and aid.

The Bureau of Economic Analysis (BEA), U.S. Department of Commerce, was a major source of assistance in the later stages of the compilation. BEA was given the responsibility for conducting a benchmark study of direct foreign investment in the United States under the Foreign Investment Study Act of 1974. In the course of preparing a mailing list for the study, BEA contacted numerous groups, such as State development agencies and Department of Commerce field offices. While its effort was directed toward all sectors of the economy, BEA provided additional names and missing addresses for this list. Its efforts helped broaden the coverage and served as a check on the completeness of the information developed by the author. The initial BEA mailing list was compiled from public sources and, as such, was not considered confidential. However, pursuant to the confidentiality provisions of the Foreign Investment Study Act of 1974, a list of those business enterprises filing reports with BEA must be confidential.

An additional source of information was the Bureau of International Commerce, Department of Commerce, which administers the "Invest in the U.S.A." program. While the program is modest in scope, the several professionals in the program come in contact with foreign direct investors. From such contacts and other sources, the publication "Foreign Direct Investors in the United States" evolved.^{6/} The professionals were able to provide a few additional firm names and addresses.

Emphasizing specific countries was successful in developing lists in only one case. Japanese subsidiaries operating in the United States frequently associate with each other for social or business reasons through "local clubs." These were a source of information in addition to attache responses. Contact was made with the United States-Japan Trade Council, the consuls general in 8 U.S. cities, 9 trade centers, and 12 of the largest trading companies in the United States. Responses were obtained from five of the consuls general, eight of the trade centers, and seven of the trading companies.

Few of the published references or individuals contacted were able to indicate if a U.S. subsidiary was primarily involved in manufacturing, wholesaling, importing, or exporting, or provide financial information on the firms. Several sources mentioned lists of U.S. firms that export or import agricultural commodities to other countries. Since such firms are probably not foreign owned, they were not included in this report.

While the product or service notation associated with the U.S. subsidiaries was sketchy in the published sources, few of the firms were reported to be involved in farming or direct agricultural production. It is likely that additional U.S. farming operations are owned by aliens and alien firms. Foreign-owned farm firms have had little incentive to seek public recognition, since they generally do not sell a product or service directly to the public.

^{6/} See app. A, p. 102.

According to the list developed for this report, 449 parent companies in 33 countries have partial or complete ownership of 876 firms in the United States (table 2). Japan has the most names, with 106 parent companies and 252 subsidiaries in the United States. The United Kingdom is in second place with 77 parent companies and 171 U.S. subsidiaries. Canada ranks third with 47 firms and 94 subsidiaries. The Netherlands, France, and Germany are in fourth, fifth, and sixth places. These six countries account for 660, or about 75 percent, of all identified foreign subsidiaries in the U.S. food and fiber system. These data, however, do not account for the relative importance of foreign-owned subsidiaries operating in various subsectors of the U.S. food and fiber system.

FUTURE INFORMATION SOURCES

Efforts were made to expand the list of parent and U.S. subsidiary operations, but with no immediate results. The Dunn and Bradstreet Corporation is not currently capable of directly identifying the linkages between foreign parent firms and U.S. subsidiaries. FAS has recently begun to provide names of firms on an international basis to facilitate international trade. Their list does not identify foreign parent-U.S. subsidiary relationships. Several State development agencies have been active in trying to attract foreign investment to their States in recent years. Foreign investors in a State do not necessarily seek assistance, nor is the State agency aware of all new direct foreign investment in the State. The National Association of State Development Agencies is, however, apparently forming a research group to tabulate new foreign investment. Agencies in State government responsible for registration, and in some cases annual reporting, of corporations do not generally require sufficient information for identification of foreign ownership.

The Conference Board, a nonprofit research institution in New York City, has recently started to develop material on new foreign investments. The information will generally focus on manufacturing sectors and information is not available for past foreign direct investment. Brokerage firms could be a useful source, but if stocks and other investment papers are placed in a street name, the firm may not know the actual identity of the owners. While perhaps the best potential source of information on foreign direct investment, the Internal Revenue Service is by law not permitted to publicly identify or disclose information on individual firms and thus is not a future source of information.

DIRECTORY OF FOREIGN INVESTORS, BY COUNTRY

Some parent companies have more than one U.S. subsidiary. A known headquarters subsidiary is recognized with an asterisk (*). Reference sources are indicated alphabetically and/or numerically for all parent companies. A letter of the alphabet by the company name signifies a source in the general references, a list of documents containing information on parent companies from more than one country (app. A). Numerical references refer to the list of specific country references (app. B). For entries indicating the primary activity of the U.S. subsidiary, the reference source is also indicated.
