Personal Performance

Resolve an argument

Try these tactics next time you need to resolve an argument.

- Listen to the other person without interrupting. If you want your viewpoint heard, communicate that you are intently listening to the other person's viewpoint.
- Pause before responding to the other person's comments. Answering immediately communicates that you haven't weighed the message just received.
- State your case calmly and accurately. Persuade with facts.
- Consider speaking through a third person. By introducing a third party with no vested interest in the discussion, you remove the emotion associated with arguments.
- Let the other person save face. Introduce a comfortable way for him or her to come over to your side. Example: "I understand how you felt that way until you received this new information."

Crud day

When tasks you dislike pile up, set aside a "crud" day to deal with them.

On that day, force yourself to get rid of all the cruddy tasks.

Additional tip: If you're a manager, give those who work for you time to do the same.

Walk this way

It's the nation's hottest new exercise—walking. "Serious" walking has fueled the growth of walking shoes, walking course layouts in shopping malls and three new magazines devoted entirely to the subject. A one-hour brisk walk at five miles per hour burns up 420 calories.

Ha, ha, ha

If you want to try out a joke before using it in a speech, test it on your banking peers, not subordinates. You need to get feedback from people who aren't afraid to tell you when something you're doing isn't effective.

TRANSITION IN AGRICULTURE: A Strategic Assessment of Agriculture and Banking

This landmark research report is the only assessment of what lies ahead for banking and agriculture specifically written for bankers. This study was conducted by an outstanding group of agricultural and financial researchers with leadership provided by Dr. John Hopkin of Hopkin & Associates. The results of the research, found only in this report, include:

- the economic future of agriculture and what this means to your bank;
- an assessment of the future of the Farm Credit System and Farmers Home Administration;
- credit and banking policy issues;
- legislative and regulatory changes that would permit banks to better serve agriculture;
- a strategic planning guide to help your bank increase its profitability in the coming decade;
- identification of the services, products and programs your bank should be planning for the future.

This report is important reading for any organization with an investment in the future of agriculture. For a free brochure describing this report, call (202) 663-5100.
