Laugh, don't cry

When stress hits, having a "good cry" is apt to make it worse, but humor helps ward off anxiety and depression, a new study shows.

Psychologists Susan Labott of the University of Toledo and Randall Martin of Northern Illinois University at DeKalb, surveyed 714 men and women. Key findings:

- At comparable stress levels, criers were more depressed, anxious, hostile and tired than those who wept less.
- Those who use humor the most are most successful at combatting stress.

What living teaches

- Enjoy life in moderation or you'll become illegal, immoral, or fat; or a fat, immoral crook.
- Keep your job problems where they belong—at work. At home, forget your office headaches.
- Learn how to relax, physically and mentally.
- Lose weight and gain years of healthful living.
- Let your hair down occasionally and enjoy yourself.
- Eat balanced, nutritious meals.
- Use your leisure time to rest and forget daily pressures.
- Set realistic goals you can meet without winding up with a heart attack or an ulcer.
