WAGE CEILING REGULATIONS APPLIED TO AGRICULTURAL LABOR 1/

Up to September 1, of this year, 69 different specific wage ceilings were issued by the Labor Branch of the United States Department of Agriculture. Top rates that farmers could pay to workers for performing specific crop operations in parts of Maine, South Dakota, Delaware, Florida, Texas, Idaho, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, and California were set up. The first farm wage ceiling was established on April 12, 1943, for asparagus harvest labor in 5 California counties. During the rest of 1943, wage ceilings for picking cotton, picking raisin grapes, and picking canning tomatoes in specified areas in California and for citrus harvest in Florida were issued.

Purpose of Wage Ceiling Regulations

Wage ceilings were applied to help make the most effective use of farm labor by reducing turnovers, excessive bidding up of wage rates by growers, and loss of time by workers in seeking jobs rumored to be paying higher wage rates, and to assist in the effort to prevent inflation. As the supply of farm workers diminished, wage rates advanced rapidly. Wage rates had gone up from a composite average for the United States of $40 per month on July 1, 1941 to $68 on July 1, 1943. On July 1, 1945, they reached $90. Also, farm operators often provided additional perquisites and inducements, over and above those formerly provided, in an effort to obtain competent workers or to retain their more efficient help.

Decreased labor supplies, expanded agricultural production, and increased farm income have kept the demand for farm labor strong during recent years. Rapidly increasing wage rates were the outgrowth of these conditions. In certain areas, competitive bidding between growers for available help was intensified as the supply of workers decreased and as farm income increased. Workers "shopped around" from grower to grower to get the highest rate of pay. This resulted in loss of time and perhaps in some loss of crops.

Legislative Basis of Program

The first request for Government control of farm wage rates came early in 1943 from asparagus growers in the Delta Section of California. On application to the Department of Agriculture they found that machinery was ready to handle such situations. The Stabilization Act of October 1942 authorized and directed the President to issue a general order to stabilize prices, wages, and salaries. Under this Act the President established the Office of Economic Stabilization. The Director of this Office issued regulations on October 27, 1942 with respect to the stabilization of wages and salaries and the administration of the program by the National War Labor Board and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. These regulations contained no specific provisions with respect to agricultural labor. On November 30, 1942 the regulations of the Economic Stabilization Director were amended to give the Secretary of Agriculture control of wage stabilization for agricultural labor. These functions of the Secretary of Agriculture were transferred to the War Food Administrator on March 26, 1943, and returned to the Secretary of Agriculture June 29, 1945. The operation of the program was delegated to the Director of the Office of Labor of the War Food Administration, now the Labor Branch of the Production and Marketing Administration.

1/ Prepared by P. P. Wallrabenstein, Agricultural Statistician, under the supervision of R. F. Hale, Agricultural Statistician, Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

The wage stabilization program consists of two parts. The first is of a general character and covers agricultural labor in all parts of the United States. The second applies only to such specific crop operations, employers, and laborers as may be designated by the Administrator of the program. The so-called "General Regulations" issued by the War Food Administrator on January 17, 1944 and later amendments, cover both parts of the program. The "Specific Wage Ceiling Regulations" of January 20, 1944 and later amendments cover only the second part.

Under the general regulations, farm wages may be increased to a rate of $200 per month. Any increases above this rate must be approved by the Administrator. If an employer paid rates higher than $200 a month for seasonal work in the year prior to December 9, 1943, he may continue to pay the same rate for the same work under similar conditions. Approval for rates of pay above $200 per month are granted on grounds similar to those laid down by the War Labor Board for increases in wages and salaries under their jurisdiction.

The General Regulations have not been widely used in areas hiring large numbers of migratory workers at piecework rates. The Specific Wage Ceiling Regulations were found to be more effective and led to fewer administrative difficulties. Under these specific regulations, the Administrator may establish maximum rates in specified areas for specific crop operations such as picking apples or harvesting potatoes. An employer may not pay more than these rates without obtaining approval. By direction of Congress through appropriation acts, no wage ceilings could be established during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1945 without a request from the majority of producers of a commodity in the affected areas. Since July 1, 1945, that provision is changed to provide that ceilings may be established upon requests of majorities of producers participating in meetings or referendums held for such purposes.

Operation of Specific Wage Ceiling Program

State Farm Wage Boards play an important part in the specific wage ceiling program. Regulations specify that the Director of the Labor Branch may establish wage boards for the various States. The members of such boards, appointed by the Director, are persons in the public employ who are interested in agriculture and agricultural employment such as AAA State chairmen or committeemen, State extension directors, State agricultural statisticians, State commissioners or directors of agriculture, college farm management specialists and leaders of other State and Federal organizations. One of the main functions of wage boards is to hold public hearings to obtain information and develop recommendations pertaining to specific areas, crops, and classes of employees, and wage rates for specific crop or farming operations. Appeals for relief from hardships resulting from wage ceilings are heard by wage boards which have the power to rule on such cases. Wage boards may also hold hearings to determine whether specific wage ceilings have been violated.

Recommendations for the establishment of wage ceilings may be initiated in two ways. Public hearings may be held by wage boards on request of producers of any commodity in a particular area. Referendums may also be conducted by these Boards, upon request, to determine whether a sufficient number of producers wish wage ceilings. In either procedure, a majority of growers attending a meeting or hearing, or participating in a referendum must register their interest in having a specific wage ceiling established before the Wage Board can take any action. Hearings are held after public notice of the meeting. Informal testimony is taken concerning the type of work to be controlled, the area affected, crop or crops to be covered, wage rates paid currently and previously, and any other related matter. After the hearing is concluded, the board prepares its recommendations which are forwarded to the Administrator with a transcript of the hearing and the request of the producers for a wage ceiling. Neither the testimony received nor the recommendations of the wage board are binding upon the Administrator in establishing a specific wage ceiling.

Applications for adjustments for relief due to hardship because of wage ceilings may be filed with State wage boards by either employees or employers. Wage boards may allow increases in wage rates in a number of different instances. Reasonable increases in wage rates may be made in the case of employees paid on a weekly, monthly, or annual basis in cases of promotions, reclassifications, merit increases, length of service and incentive payments where such adjustments do not appreciably increase the level of production costs. Increases in hourly and piecework rates may be allowed for incentive payments and circumstances which lower daily earnings below a reasonable level expected under normal conditions. Factors considered in making adjustments in hourly or piecework rates include: reduction of daily earnings due to poor yields in parts of an area, unusual weather and atmospheric conditions which reduce working hours, and other unusual circumstances beyond the control of employer and employee.

The pages that follow summarize all of the specific wage ceilings issued up to September 1, 1945 by the Director of the Labor Branch.<sup>2/</sup> Summaries of new and revised ceilings, as issued, will be published monthly in the Farm Labor Report. Copies of regulations or more specific details may be obtained from State wage boards or from the Production and Marketing Administration of the United States Department of Agriculture, (Labor Branch, Wage Stabilization Division,) Washington 25, D.C.
